This course is intended to enable students to apply ethical analysis and theory to a broad range of contemporary moral issues, including euthanasia, suicide, capital punishment, abortion, famine relief, animal rights, and environmental concerns. Students can expect to gain not only training in the concepts and main theoretical approaches of moral philosophy, but also critical thinking skills needed for assessing morally difficult questions that we routinely face in our world today.